Dental Laboratories fill prescriptions from dentists for all types of restorations including crowns, bridges, dentures, and other dental prosthetics.

First, dentists send a specification of the item to be manufactured, along with an impression or mold of the patient's mouth or teeth. Based upon observations of the mold and the dentist's specifications, technicians build and shape a wax tooth or teeth model, using small hand instruments. They use this wax model to cast the metal framework for the prosthetic device adding porcelain, and adjusting shape and color. The final product is a nearly exact replica of the patient's tooth or teeth.
