In many states, Nurse Practitioners (NPs) may practice and operate their own offices without constant supervision by a physician. These registered nurses are state-licensed and have achieved the highest educational level that a nurse can obtain – usually a Masters degree. NPs are trained to diagnose and treat many common and chronic medical conditions and are now providing care formerly offered only by physicians. Nurse Practitioners may also prescribe medication with a physician's guidance.

These professionals are excellent prospects for recruitment, medical journals, seminars, continuing education, in addition to a wide variety of consumer offers including magazines, credit card and vacation offers among others.
